

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON:
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1883
AN OUTSIDE OPINION.

Talking of transportation the Oregon Villager says: If the Columbia river is opened by free government canals at the Cascades and The Dalles, and the canal at Oregon City made free, then the produce of these great valleys can be reached by competing steamboats, and the barge can float the crops of both valleys all the way to Astoria at a dollar per ton, instead of the five and ten dollars now exacted by the railroad monopoly. Therefore the exertions of the State should be put forth to secure these free canals. Let the government appropriations be concentrated on the canals at the Cascades and The Dalles, and upon improvements of the Columbia bar, while the State should at the earliest possible period condemn to public use, at a fair valuation, the canal at Oregon City. Portland will not like this programme, but that city ought not to be allowed to any longer dictate the commercial policy of the State. Its Board of Trade and wealthy citizens have all surrendered their rights and opinions to the leadership of Henry Villard, and he is at work to build up Puget Sound and not Oregon. The farmers, producers, and interior merchants must now make common cause with Astoria to make that the shipping point for Oregon. Let us waste no more efforts to get money to dig out a canal to let ocean ships ascend one hundred miles above Astoria. Secure first, a good entrance over the bar to Astoria, then open these canals to free navigation, and after that let each town and city take care of its own local interests.

AST hope that the Pacific coast may have entertained concerning probable railroad competition, is doomed to disappointment. The managers have agreed to make all they can and divide the territory, each company cinching the public all it can in its own bailiwick. The Central Pacific people have bribed Villard by a bonus of a yearly half million dollars on San Francisco business to "keep off," and as far as lower rates are concerned they are deferred to future possibility.

A new phase of the salmon supply is developed by the recent arrival at London of a Hudson Bay company's steamer at Labrador with thirty-five tons of frozen salmon aboard. What the condition of the salmon was after being thoroughly thawed is not stated.

THERE will be a meeting in New York this week of the N. P. R. R. directors to ratify the new loan of twenty million dollars on the second mortgage bonds of the company, enough stock having been secured to make the ratification possible.

PROF. BAIRD, of the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, wants some live specimens of clams sent to him. Clatsop and Tillamook can furnish him the fattest and finest flavored in the world.

The Canadian government has guaranteed its faith for $65,000,000 of the bonds of the Canadian Pacific railroad.

The Flatheads and Crows are fighting each other in Montana. The result so far is—several good Indians.

The Portland News now appears as a neat eight column folio, and is published every day in the year.

THREE continents unite in celebrating the four hundredth anniversary of the birth of Martin Luther.
